So I started this job a few weeks ago. I'm not really allowed to talk about it, but since we're friends I figure I could tell you. Hope no one's listening, we're okay here, right? Cool, it's easy to be paranoid about this stuff. But I gotta tell someone. I'm now an analyst for Big Eyes Security, a private intelligence contractor, data mining for threats and shit. I know I'm supposed to be looking for warning signs, but I don't see how reading grandma's email talking about her bursitis is going to prevent terrorist attacks, you know? Don't get me wrong, I think it's fun to read people's emails. You wouldn't believe some of the things people are into. I found a social network of people who collect their own shit. No, seriously. They call themselves excrementistas. They share all these rules of thumb about the proper way to can their turds, how to label and store it, even where to sell it. One guy even writes poems about it. Thank god for the internet, you know, that these people can finally find each other. And I've got their names and addresses. You remember Ted from high school, stoner Ted the affable gearhead? If you ever see him, don't shake his hand, ok? So anyways my boss tells me to surprise him with something, show him what I can do. I figure sure, great, here's my chance to get in good with him. So I spend like one day looking around. Didn't take me long to discover something I thought would impress him. I go to his office, tell him that he might want to check the mirrors in that motel he goes to during those long lunches he takes on Tuesdays to meet his girlfriend Nancy. He got real quiet and his face got so red it glowed. Then he asked, real serious, why? I said 'cause the owner was a peeper who installed hidden cameras in the rooms. How did I know that, he asked. Then I showed him a picture I found on the guy's computer of them sixty-nining. Let's just say they both had their mouths full, 'cause Nancy's dick was as big as her tits. I surprised him all right. Even got a raise and a promotion.
